

When Esopo was born his parents had no possessions, they were poor. His father was a shepherd, and it happened that one day he found a pot of gold and decided to keep it. The other shepherds found out about it and told the king who became angry at him for not turning in the pot of gold. He then took away his sheep and banished him from the country. He was sent to the city of Croton, Sicily, where he became a shepherd and married a girl named Rhodope. The king of Croton was also somewhat poor, so he sent for some shepherds to come to his country who told him of Esopo. When they came to the place where Esopo was working he asked them what they were doing there. The men told him that they had been sent by the king of Croton because he needed some shepherds for his land. When they arrived in Croton, the king's daughter saw them and became interested in Esopo. In order to be near him, she pretended to be insane and was placed in a room in the palace. When Esopo came, he told her that he could make her well if she would marry him. She then pretended to have a seizure and when Esopo went into the room she told him that she was going to die and asked him for a proper burial. She then pretended to die, but Esopo saw through her charade and said that he could not help her. He left the room, but the king's daughter started crying so much that he clandestinely returned to take care of her. He then took care of the king's daughter and brought her to his home. While he was working as a shepherd, he was given a bowl containing some gold, but one day it fell from the cart and broke. He told his two nephews to take it back to the city, but they threw it over a wall, where it landed in the hands of a nobleman. The man gave Esopo a large sum of money for finding this treasure. Esopo took the money and said that no one should know about this treasure because he had found it himself. When his father heard that he had been banished from Sicily because of a pot of gold, he asked him what happened to it. He told him that he was now a shepherd and had no money. When the king heard about this, he became very angry and threw him off his land. He then lived as a shepherd with his wife and took care of farms with the help of his two nephews who would come to visit him. Esopo died when he was 90 years old. The Aesop's Fables The Aesop's fables were written by Aesop himself Many of them even describe everyday life in Ancient Greece,for example one tells how a lion could not catch an ant because it was blindfolded.
