

Nick White

Dr. Tubbs

Sports reporting

17 April 2019

Profile Feature 2

Drew Coleman gave his all to the game of football, his career ended early but that did not stop him from giving back to others. After his playing days in the NFL he had more time to spend time with his family. He was so use to being on the big stage each and every sunday. After that was over he had to get use to doing other things. His final season was in 2012 with the Detroit Lion.

“ Coleman said once he started to battle injuries he knew the NFL was coming to an end. I had already been preparing myself for the future, it was not what I had planned though. I gave my all to this game I love.”

“ I knew many celebrities during my playing days, after I was out the NFL for a while we lost contact. Many people was only around because of the fame I had while playing.”

Drew Coleman a former NFL player from Texas, was drafted by the New York Jets in 2006, he played there for five years. Coleman came in as an underdog being drafted in the 6th round, as well as being a smaller DB. He came in and proved himself right away, which was not easy because he played with revis which is an all time great cornerback. He played for Rex Ryan and with Mark Sanchez as well. They went to back to back AFC championship games versus Tom Brady. Coleman gives back to his community time after time. He also gave back by coaching a blinn, which is where we met. This was a way for him to give us the blueprint on what it takes to make it to the pros.

Coleman may not be in the NFL anymore but he is still a leader and more. He loves give back what he learned in the NFL. Coleman loves to give back and help others in any way shape or form. He is happy with life after the NFL because he can give everything he learned with life to the youth and others.

